2004 Annual Report
What signifies knowing the natures of things if you do not know the natures of the things?
Welcome to the World of Agriculture in the Classroom!

Agriculture in California is responsible for raising more than food and fiber. It also has the responsibility to raise the agricultural awareness of six million students.

On its own, the California Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom (CFAITC) tackles this task by providing a solid foundation of resource materials and opportunities that help educate students and their teachers. Statewide, the Foundation teams up with an array of ag literacy partners, helping make the whole task manageable. Read further to explore how, in 2004, CFAITC used its resources and encouraged collaboration by all ag literacy proponents to heighten student appreciation of California’s number one industry.
The noblest question in the world is: “What good may I do in it?”
A Good Word from Bill Pauli

Bill Pauli and Outstanding Teacher Award Recipient Cathey Anderson.

Agriculture is at a critical crossroad. Each California-grown commodity and every agricultural issue must come together as one to look up and out at the big picture facing this industry today. In past eras, the crossroad was not so all encompassing. It worked for like-commodities and issues to simply cross paths up and down the state. Times have changed!

We’ve recognized for decades that the fallout from last century’s farm exodus would eventually affect agriculture’s ability to function effectively. Today’s issues are bigger and more complex than ever. But agriculture’s strength to tackle what comes, stems from its time-tested ability to be inventive and to help one’s neighbor.

It’s that collaborative nature, in large part, that has guided the California Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom into its position as a leader in the field of agricultural literacy. We take that role seriously, because the path agriculture takes beyond the crossroad will be determined in large part by agricultural literacy beyond the farm gate.

For the Foundation, this has been a year of collaboration unlike any other. From the California Department of Food and Agriculture and the California university system to commodity organizations and individual donors, we have teamed up with others to ultimately serve a greater number of educators and volunteers than ever before. We are thrilled that those for whom we hold great admiration have been approaching us for input, assistance and teamwork. Our ability to increase California’s basic knowledge about agriculture is strengthened by those who collaborate. I invite you to read further to understand what a milestone year this has been for us and for agriculture as a whole!

Bill Pauli, Chairman of the Board, California Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom
The Learned Educational Resources Committee

More than 100 individuals representing almost as many educational and agricultural entities have become colleagues with a shared goal: a commitment, individually and cumulatively, to the development, discovery and distribution of educational resources and opportunities heightening agricultural awareness.

That shared goal brings the group together multiple times a year as the Educational Resources Committee of the California Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom. The gatherings act both as a conduit of information about current agricultural literacy happenings and as a tool for evaluating newly-emerging resources.

The ultimate result is the accumulation of accurate and well-balanced resources available to California’s educators. This sum discovery takes form in the Teacher Resource Guide, published annually by the Foundation. Highly respected by educators, it lists resources related to agriculture and relevant to the classroom.

This collaborative effort is vitally important to the Foundation’s ability to support California’s 309,800 educators with reputable and trustworthy resources. Visit the Agriculture in the Classroom Website at www.cfaite.org under “About Us” to view the 2004 Educational Resources Committee individual and organization members.

For every action, there is a reaction. For Paulette Smith, a Bay Area 4th grade teacher, the action was submitting her name in a Newspapers in Education contest co-sponsored by the Foundation and the San Francisco Chronicle. The reaction was a whole lot of ooohs and aahhhs, with more than a few thousand smiles tossed in for good measure. Ms. Smith was the winner of a Farm Day for her inner-city school, Garfield Elementary in Oakland. The Farm Day transformed Garfield’s ball field into one large corral of small farm animals. Lambs, goats, chickens, rabbits and ducks, along with their “farmers,” collectively presented an agricultural lesson that will linger in the memories of these 1,000+ Oakland students for years to come.

Activity stations scattered about the “corral” linked agriculture to nutrition (both human and animal), careers, pesky and propitious pests, export trade, and a whole slew of by-products people use daily whose beginnings in agriculture are hidden, just like roots in soil.

The students took only moments to warm up to the sights and smells on their ball field, separated from hectic Oakland traffic on three sides by chain-link fencing. It was a learning experience far different from the classroom, a learning experience that utilized all five senses.

Dena Gibbons, coordinator of the event, remarked, “Some of these students have never seen a lamb while others may have come from faraway farming cultures, only to find themselves living in the city, completely removed from plants and animals.”

To extend the value of Farm Day, Garfield was presented with equipment to invigorate a dry plot of playground near the classrooms. The school staff was linked to local experts for guidance on establishing outdoor garden classrooms. The ability to learn about plants — and the many garden extensions that will emphasize agriculture’s presence in our lives — will carry on for years beyond the one-day Garfield Farm Day.
The Foundation extends many thanks to partnering entities that helped make Oakland Farm Day such a pleasant surprise for the staff and students of Garfield Elementary.
The annual Agriculture in the Classroom Conference is the Foundation’s keystone in the arch of educator support spanning the state. This year’s event was held October 21 through 23 in Visalia, deep in the heart of agricultural country. Attended by 422 people, it was supported heartily by Tulare County and surrounding farm bureaus, agricultural education committees, and many of producers and processors.

Agriculture made a presence that left California’s educators feeling really good about this state’s leading economic force. The conference put a human touch and a friendly face to an all-too-often maligned industry.

Those who have been before anxiously anticipated three days packed with workshops, tours, resources, and ideas for classroom use the following Monday. Those who had never participated got their socks knocked off — but not before learning just how those socks are a product of California agriculture!

Foundation staff views the conference as its premier function. “In addition to benefiting those who attend, Conference keeps us in touch with what teachers are looking for,” says Judy Culbertson, CFAITC executive director. “That helps us to respond to their needs.”

Throughout the state, many entities work individually to strengthen agricultural awareness in California. The Foundation welcomed the participation of 57 of these individuals and organizations, all of which generated an interest in and commitment to agricultural literacy. Collaboration is the key to success!

Plans for 2005 send conference-goers to Sacramento October 20-22.
Teachers depart headquarters to step into a local cotton field, orchard, dairy, or nursery to see, touch and smell agriculture. They witness the technology of harvesting, the food safety steps in packaging and the many jobs in marketing that are all a part of agriculture.
When the well is dry, they know the worth of water.
A CONVERGENCE OF PERSONS FOR NATIONAL AGRICULTURE WEEK

National Agriculture Week, annually observed in March, focuses coast-to-coast attention upon the many ways agriculture intertwines itself with our everyday existence. Its purpose is to help Americans rediscover why agriculture is such an integral part of their lives — even if they perceive no personal connection whatsoever. The Foundation celebrated National Agriculture Week in ways almost as varied as agriculture itself.

In what has become an annual tradition, the popular Imagine this… awards ceremony stole the show during the week’s celebratory activities. Imagine this…, an annual writing contest for grades 3-8, supports writing skills using agriculture as a theme. Six winning stories were selected from 10,000 written. But the contest didn’t end there. Its impact extended to high school students through the development of an animated video featuring the top stories. More than 80 art and drama students fine-tuned skills they may someday use professionally as they worked in teams to produce the video. The awards ceremony recognized the amazing talents of the authors and production teams, emphasizing that Imagine this… motivates students because they connect what they are doing in school to a relevant end result. That’s meaningful, especially when the theme is agricultural!

Supporters of agricultural literacy shared enthusiasm for student talent when the Imagine this… video and its young authors appeared at the Tribute to Agriculture dinner event at Sacramento’s historic Sutter Club. Industry support is the lifeblood of agricultural literacy, and more than 150 of the Foundation’s partners gathered for an evening of fine food, good company, and words of inspiration from Cathey Anderson, Outstanding Educator of 2004. Cathey makes no bones about it: Agriculture helps her students connect, grow and feel successful. All in all, the evening garnered an astounding $80,000 toward future agricultural literacy endeavors.

Finally, California Ag Day, sponsored by California Department of Food and Agriculture and California Women for Agriculture, spread an agricultural bounty across the Capitol lawn. Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger applauded the contributions to society made every single day by agriculture. Recognized as a major player in statewide literacy efforts, the Foundation was given a prime spot for exhibiting a wealth of resources that enable teachers, parents and youth leaders to bolster an appreciation of agriculture.

Golf at Poppy Hills

The generosity of our Poppy Hills golfers raised sponsorships toward hooking California’s students onto agriculture while learning of its impact on their lives.

Thank you!
