

Lymie

Lymie is a black and white cow. She has a really cool, white stripe that goes down her back. She is a very old cow that walks slow. She lives on my uncle's farm. She has seen many days come and go on that farm. Lymie is a special cow to me. She likes to give me hugs by wrapping her head around me. If I curled up next to her, I know she would keep me warm in the winter. I would really, really miss her if she didn't have a place on the farm for her to live on. She is the reason my uncle's farm means so much to me.

Lymie spends a lot of her time drinking water, eating grass and grain so she can produce a lot of milk for my uncle. I often see her on the top of a very grassy hill eating away. The grass must taste the best there. She has been going in the barn twice a day, so she can create milk.

If I could see Lymie every day I would. I like to hang out with her. She has had like many babies. Some day they will give lots of milk for my uncle too. The milk that Lymie gives goes into a big bulk tank. It waits there until the milk truck comes and picks it up. Lymie's milk is important because it can be used to make lots of different kinds of food like ice cream, cheese, and butter.

Lymie has lived many years on that farm. She has eaten lots of grass, hay, and grain to produce milk. She is only one of many cows that has helped the farm market to stay alive. Look at what just one cow can do to make one little difference. Her milk is fresh and home-grown.
