Connecting Children to Agriculture

Thank You!

Dear AITC Supporter,

As we reflect on the past year, I am filled with gratitude for the incredible community of donors, partners, volunteers, and friends who make our mission of connecting children to agriculture possible. Because of your generosity and your belief in agricultural literacy, Virginia Agriculture in the Classroom (AITC) continues to create meaningful opportunities for children across Virginia to connect with agriculture that inspired curiosity, build understanding, and help shape future leaders and consumers.

This year, we reached an exciting milestone by connecting more than 700,000 children to agriculture through engaging, hands-on educational experiences. Whether students met a farmer for the first time, discovered where their food, fiber and fuel come from, or discovered exciting careers in agriculture, each experience helped strengthen their understanding of an industry that impacts us all.

Your support also made it possible to raise more than $460,000 to ensure that AITC programs continue to grow and reach even more students. Every gift, sponsorship, and partnership represents an investment in the future of agriculture literacy and in the youth who will one day lead our communities.

Our special events continue to be a cornerstone of that success. From our signature Taste of Virginia dinners to our sporting clay shoots and our annual golf tournament, each event celebrates Virginia agriculture, strengthens relationships with our supporters, and creates new opportunities to invest in agriculture literacy. Beyond raising essential funds, they give AITC a platform to share our story, celebrate Virginia's agricultural community, and champion the belief that every child should understand where their food, fuel, and fiber come from.

None of these accomplishments would be possible without you. Your commitment helps ensure that students across the Commonwealth gain a deeper knowledge of agriculture and understand the vital role it plays in their daily lives. Together, we are planting the seeds of knowledge, curiosity, and opportunity that will continue to grow for generations.

Thank you for being an essential part of the AITC journey. I am excited to see what we will accomplish together in the year ahead.

Connecting in the Classroom

Virginia AITC Teacher of the Year

Cindy Watson, a middle school teacher at Forest Middle School in Bedford County, was named the Virginia Agriculture in the Classroom 2026 Teacher of the Year. The award recognizes a Virginia educator for incorporating agriculture into their core curriculum.

Watson uses agriculture as a foundation for hands-on STEM learning in her exploratory science and robotics design classes. Through science, robotics and technology-based lessons, she helps students understand how agriculture impacts their daily lives while challenging common misconceptions about modern farming.

"Cindy's application of agriculture in her curriculum enhances her students' agricultural literacy and sparks curiosity," said Lynn Black, Virginia AITC director of education. "By connecting farming with STEM concepts, she's helping students become more informed and responsible adults who understand where their food comes from, and the vital role agriculture plays in our world."

Watson also integrates robotics, drone navigation and modeling to examine pollination and ecosystems that are critical to food production; the effect of natural disasters; and complex agricultural supply chains. Her robotics coursework introduces students to precision agriculture and demonstrates how farmers use drones and GPS to manage their crops and improve efficiency.

Additionally, her lessons showcase how agriculture and STEM concepts overlap in career fields, such as coding for autonomous harvesters, using biotechnology to develop drought-resistant crops, or operating vertical farms. Overall, her approach underscores the critical role science and technology play in modern agriculture, and how innovation helps feed a growing global population in a complex modern food system.

"Through these experiences, students can figure out at a younger age whether this is something they'd want to pursue as a career," said Watson, who grew up on a farm outside of Chicago. "I like to give my students opportunities they might not get somewhere else. This is my passion, and I'm fortunate to have a community that supports these programs."

As Virginia AITC Teacher of the Year, Watson received a scholarship to the 2026 National AITC Conference in June in Providence, Rhode Island, and a $500 cash award.

School Grant Program

A total of 70 grants were awarded to schools and organizations across 44 Virginia localities. Grant recipients included elementary, middle, and high schools, both public and private. Grant funding allowed over 26,000 students to take part in a hands-on agricultural projects. Projects included classroom hydroponics, agricultural career exploration, embryology, and even oyster harvesting.

Teacher Testimonials

Smithfield Middle School grant recipient:

"Students developed a deeper understanding of where food comes from by actively participating in the growing process, from seed to transplant to harvest. Their appreciation for agriculture increased as they recognized the effort and knowledge required to produce healthy food and saw the value of local farming in their community."

DCR Workshop Participant

"I knew what Ag in the Classroom was, but I didn't know they had great online resources. This is a game changer."

Connecting with Educators

Guest Instruction at Virginia Colleges and Universities

AITC equips future educators with the tools to seamlessly integrate agriculture into core academic standards through immersive, hands-on workshops. By engaging in these interactive sessions, preservice teachers gain immediate access to comprehensive curriculum guides and practical resources, empowering them to deliver impactful, classroom-ready lessons on day one.

Central Virginia Traveling Workshop

The 2025 Traveling Workshop gave educators an up-close look at a variety of agricultural operations in the central Virginia area. Participants started at a beef cattle farm in Goochland County, where they learned how farmers take care of both their livestock and the vital soil and water resources on which they rely. The journey continued with stops that included a state-of-the-art hydroponic lettuce facility. There, educators were treated to a behind-the-scenes tour detailing the latest technological advancements in controlled environment agriculture. By bridging the gap between traditional field farming and modern indoor production, this event gave many participants their first hands-on experience visiting a farm. Ultimately, the workshop equipped teachers with a wealth of knowledge, real-world examples, and lesson ideas to take back to their classrooms to inspire the next generation.

Connecting through Unique Resources

Agriculture Resource Kits

In 2025-2026 over 2,200 educators had unique agriculturally themed resources mailed directly to their home or school free of charge! These CARE Packages (Create Agricultural Resources for Educators) included AITC curriculum, newsletters, books, and teachers' guides. These 2,200 educators represented 119 different localities within the state and included elementary, secondary and homeschool educators. CARE Packages provide educators with the tools and background knowledge to confidently incorporate agriculture into their curriculum.

AITC Ambassador Program

AITC's Ambassador Program provides both educators and volunteers with the opportunity to receive special resources and training to connect children in their communities with agriculture. At quarterly meetings, AITC education staff share the latest materials and demonstrate hands-on activities that can be used in either a classroom or a community event setting. Ambassadors also receive special resource kits at the conclusion of each meeting that they can use with children in their community. These resources help ambassadors bring agriculture to life in meaningful and engaging ways, whether they are leading a lesson, hosting an exhibit, reading a book with students, or supporting a local outreach event. Through this program, AITC is able to extend its reach beyond traditional classrooms and equip local advocates to share accurate, relevant agricultural education across the state.

Connecting with Special Events,

Golf Tournament

The 29th annual golf tournament, held on May 18 at The Dominion Club in Glen Allen, was a huge success! Despite temperatures reaching the nineties golfers thoroughly enjoyed a bright, sunny day on the greens.

Thanks to generous sponsors and dedicated participants, the event raised over $83,980 to support our mission of connecting children to agriculture. Thank you all for making this year's tournament so memorable!

Mark your calendars for the 30th annual golf tournament, happening on Monday, May 17, 2027, at The Dominion Club.

Clay Shoots

AITC hosts three annual clay shoots across the state to raise awareness and vital funds to connect children with agriculture. Last fall, sports enthusiasts gathered for the third consecutive year at Old Forge Sporting Clays in Providence Forge, as well as at Arrowhead Gun Club in Southside Virginia. Participants enjoyed a day of friendly competition and fellowship, all in support of a great cause. Continuing a long-standing tradition, shooters also gathered this past March at the Flying Rabbit Sporting Clays in Mt. Crawford. Together, these events raised over $17,000. Join us at future events to keep the momentum going!

all across Virginia!

Taste of Virginia

Our Taste of Virginia event evolved into a successful regional series over the past year, expanding both its impact and reach. We launched the series in the fall at Showalter's Orchard in the Shenandoah Valley and concluded with our second regional event at Woodbine Vineyards in Buffalo Junction.

The Taste of Virginia experience has transformed into an elegant, seated dinner that highlights Virginia's exceptional agriculture producers while creating meaningful opportunities for attendees to connect with the people behind the food. Each event focuses on sharing producers' stories, celebrating the diversity of Virginia's agriculture, and strengthening the connection between consumers and producers. "While the mission remains consistent throughout each event, we pride ourselves on making each event unique by showcasing the distinct agricultural heritage, producers, and flavors of the region where the event is held," commented Christy Murphy, AITC director of development.

By bringing together local producers, community members, and supporters in an intimate setting, the Taste of Virginia series continues to build awareness for our mission of connecting children to agriculture while generating necessary support for our programs.

"Taste of Virginia continues to grow. Over the course of the next year, we plan to expand the series to four regional events," adds Murphy. "Each dinner will continue to feature the flavors and stories that make each region of Virginia special."

Additional details regarding event locations and dates will be announced as details are finalized. We look forward to welcoming supporters to these signature events as we continue to expand their impact across the state.

Connecting with Volunteers

Cultivate the 88

For the fifth consecutive year, AITC completed the Cultivate the 88 campaign with all 88 Virginia county Farm Bureaus. We are truly grateful for the full engagement across the state that drives this ongoing success.

Agriculture Literacy Week

During Virginia's Agriculture Literacy Week, stories connected children across the commonwealth to the agricultural community and the farmers who grow their food.

Around 1,300 volunteers read AITC's 2026 Book of the Year, Farm Boots by Renée Kurilla, to 77,000 children during AITC's annual Agriculture Literacy Week March 23-27. Additionally, 3,200 copies of the book were donated to Virginia classrooms, including public and private schools, community clubs and local libraries.

"We completely sold out of books!" said Lynn Black, AITC director of education. "This event creates so many fun farm-to-classroom connections with students. It's not just reading a book—it's an experience that sparks curiosity in children, encourages discussion, and demonstrates the crucial role farmers play in putting food on our tables."

Along with reading aloud, many volunteers engaged with students through hands-on educational activities, demonstrations and Q&As.

In Henrico County, Extension agents Carter Humphries and Laila Ampy-Thomas partnered with 4-H and FFA members to read to students at several area schools throughout the week. During the readings, they led lively discussions on farms, farm animals and produce, alongside activities that taught students about various crops Virginia farmers grow throughout the year.

"This year was especially fun because students were able to connect their learning about the seasons to real-life activities on the farm, like planting strawberries, collecting chicken eggs, picking pumpkins, and so much more," Humphries said. "We enjoyed seeing their creativity as they designed their own farm boots and shared what type of farmer they would be. Those hands-on connections help bring the lessons to life, and it's exciting to watch youth make those connections to their everyday lives."

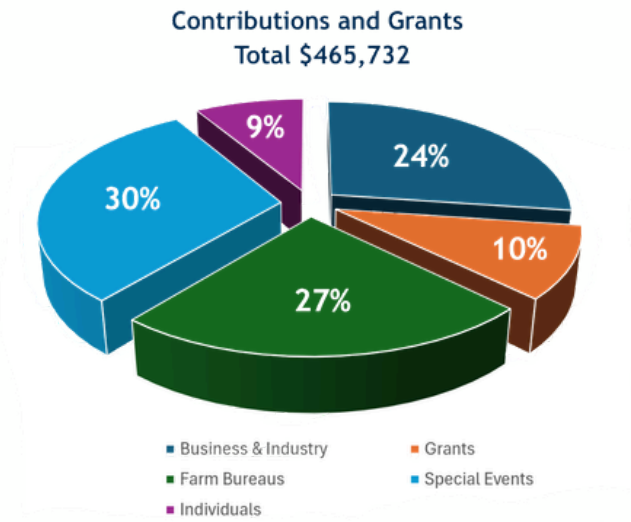

Now in its 17th year, Agriculture Literacy Week is AITC's largest educational event. The program provides a fun, interactive way to increase children's knowledge of farming, the sources of their food and fiber, and the importance of agriculture.

Volunteer readers also included Gov. Abigail Spanberger; Virginia Secretary of Agriculture and Forestry Katie Frazier; Deputy Secretary of Agriculture and Forestry Ben Rowe; Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services Commissioner Charles Green; members of Virginia's legislature; county Farm Bureau leaders; employees of VDACS and Farm Credit; and FFA and 4-H club members.

Connecting through Donors

AITC would be nothing without our donors. Because of your generosity, thousands of children and educators across the state are more knowledgeable about agriculture. Because of you, our Foundation connected over 700,000 children to agriculture this year. Thank you!
